Subject: New child support guide lines.

I support the new changes to the child support guide lines. I have joint custody with my two kids and they spend an average of 103 days a year with me. 75 % of the time is per the custody guide lines setup by friend of the court and the rest of the time is spur of the moment to help the ex out because of her work commitments. We have both remarried and she has more income then I do living in a six bathroom new house with a maid. Yet I get no support break from the time the kids spend with me. I will always support my kids to make sure they have a comfortable lifestyle, but believe the current guide lines are out of date and needs to be changed to better reflect most parents situations today.

Sincerely, Brian Carpenter
